

EVENING ROUNDUP

Daily Evening Report on Bullion, Base Metals and Energy Commodities

Tuesday, December 9, 2025

- Gold spot steadied ahead of this week's U.S. Federal Reserve meeting, as market participants await clearer guidance on the central bank's interest rate path.
- U.S. Dollar index, a measure of greenback against its six rival currencies, slipped on the prospects of dovish move from Fed.
- U.S. private payrolls fell by 32,000 in November, the steepest decline in over two and a half years, raising concerns about labor market resilience. Attention now turns to the delayed non-farm payrolls report, expected to provide critical insight into economic health.
- Copper prices retreated from record highs on both LME and MCX, as market sentiment remains focused on the upcoming Federal Reserve rate decision, despite concerns over tight supply.
- Crude oil prices slipped further, extending the previous session's losses, as markets closely monitor peace negotiations to end Russia's war in Ukraine and weigh concerns over abundant supply.
- OPEC+ decided to keep oil output unchanged for the first quarter of 2026, signaling a slowdown in its efforts to reclaim market share amid concerns over a potential supply glut.
- China's crude oil imports rose 4.88% in November from a year earlier, with daily import volumes reaching the highest level since August 2023. The world's largest crude importer brought in 12.38 million barrels per day, up 5.24% from October.
- NYMEX natural gas futures dropped from nearly a three-year high, pressured by forecasts for milder weather over the next two weeks, near-record production levels, abundant storage, and weaker global prices.
- U.S. liquefied natural gas (LNG) exports hit a record monthly high in November for the second consecutive month, driven by cooler weather and strong output from the nation's two largest producers.
- China's manufacturing PMI signaled contraction in November, reflecting sluggish demand and indicating that progress in U.S. trade talks has yet to translate into a meaningful demand recovery.
