- ▶ On Wednesday, spot USDINR gained one paise to 83.4025, the fresh record high following dollar demand ahead of crucial policy meetings. India's 10-year yields fell 2bps to 7.26%. Technically, spot USDINR has support at 83.25 and resistance at 83.50.
- ▶ Asian markets rallied Thursday and the dollar extended losses after the Federal Reserve indicated it will begin cutting interest rates next year. Japan's currency strengthened to levels not seen since August and advanced further early Thursday.
- ▶ The Fed held interest rates steady for a third consecutive meeting and gave the clearest signal yet that its most aggressive campaign of interest-rate rises could soon be at an end. Chair Jerome Powell indicated policymakers are now turning their focus to when to cut rates as inflation continues its descent. Officials also released their "dot plot" of future rates, which saw 75 basis points of cuts in 2024 more than indicated in September.
- ▶ Elsewhere, oil advanced from a five-month low on positive demand signals including a drop in US inventories and signs that the Federal Reserve has finished hiking interest rates. Global benchmark Brent was above $74. US crude stockpiles fell for a second week while total oil and product inventories declined by the most since October, the Energy Information Administration said.
