Already, as of June 2024, Rural India was spending 54% of its monthly spending towards non-food discretionary items and urban India was spending 61% of its monthly spending towards non-food discretionary items. (Source: Latest available data as on 30th June, 2024, Ministry of Statistics and Programme Implementation. With rise of per capita GDP, increase in middle class income households, easier and wider access to goods, services and opportunities, the discretionary consumption is expected to increase further. Investors keen on seeking exposure to the rise in discretionary and aspirational spending by Indian consumer may look at taking exposure in these new schemes from a long-term point of view.
