US Markets Scores Another Record High as Post-Fed Gains Continue

U.S. stocks ended firmer on Thursday, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average notching its second straight record high close, lifted by optimism that borrowing rates will decrease next year following a dovish pivot by the Federal Reserve.

Financial shares remained among the market's strongest post-FOMC gainers, reflecting ideas that lower interest rates will boost profit margins for banks

The small-cap Russell 2000 Index continued to outgain largecap counterparts, rising 2.7% to a 4.5-month high.

US Retail sales data released early Thursday suggested consumer spending is still holding up despite high-interest rates. Retail sales posted a monthly gain of 0.3% in November, according to the Census Bureau, up from a decline of 0.2% in October and above expectations for a 0.1% drop. Compared to November 2022, sales jumped 4.1%.

The Labor Department reported weekly Initial Jobless Claims at 202,000, below the 222,000 consensus and the previous week's 221,000. It was the lightest weekly figure since October. Continuing claims rose to 1.876 million, still near two-year highs and up slightly from the previous week.

Asian markets are set to end the week on the front foot as another steep slide in the dollar and U.S. bond yields extends the Fed-fueled buying frenzy, although some investors may be tempted to take some chips off the table ahead of the weekend. The MSCI emerging market and Asia ex-Japan indexes both rose around 2%.

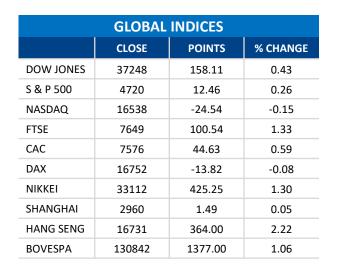

The latest Chinese retail sales, industrial production, business investment, unemployment, and house price data for November will be released today, and investors will be looking for signs of growth or, in some cases, accelerating growth. China's central bank is expected to keep its one-year lending rate steady but increase liquidity injections.

Nifty continued its upward journey and registered a fresh alltime of 21210 on 14th December. Nifty surged 256 points after the US FOMC signaled slower growth and lower inflation. Next resistance for Nifty is seen at 21430, which happens to be 76.4% extension level of the recent swings. The psychologically important number of 21000 now becomes support for Nifty.

Indian markets are slated to open higher in line with higher Asian markets today and stronger US markets on Thursday.
