Powering India's Investments

Record $6 Trillion Derivatives Expiry in US Today – Geopolitics Will Dictate Market Trend.

US markets were closed to observe the Juneteenth holiday.

American stock futures declined on Thursday evening as investors grappled with the prospect of direct American military intervention in the escalating Israel-Iran conflict. President Trump's announcement of a self-imposed two-week deadline for his decision on entering the war injected fresh uncertainty into already jittery markets.

The expanding regional conflict has unnerved investors following reports that a major hospital in southern Israel suffered extensive damage and casualties from Iranian missile strikes. Israel has vowed to intensify its retaliatory operations in response.

Senior US officials are reportedly preparing for potential strikes against Iran within days, compounding market anxieties that emerged after the Federal Reserve revised down its growth projections and forecast higher inflation. The central bank's assessment underscored how tariff-related uncertainties are hampering its monetary policy adjustments.

In the U.S. markets, derivative contracts linked to more than $6 trillion in stocks, ETFs, and indices are due to expire today during the latest "triple witching" options-expiration event — potentially the most significant sum on record.

In Europe, Norway's central bank cut its policy interest rate by 25 basis points to 4.25% on Thursday and stated that further cuts were likely due to a more benign inflation outlook. The Swiss National Bank reduced its interest rate to zero as policymakers sought to deter investors from pushing up the franc, which has gained almost 10% against the dollar this year.

Asian equity markets sought direction on Friday morning as concerns over a potential US attack on Iran weighed heavily on investor sentiment. Meanwhile, oil prices appeared set to record gains for the third consecutive week amid the intensifying Israel-Iran confrontation.

The Nifty continued its downward trend for the third consecutive day, amid rising geopolitical tensions. On the day of the Nifty weekly expiry, the index exhibited a lacklustre performance, confined within a narrow range, and ultimately ended the day with a minor loss of 18 points (0.08%).

The index remains in a consolidation phase. The 24,700 level now serves as a key support on the downside. A decisive close below this critical support level of 24,700 could intensify selling pressure and potentially drag the index towards the next support band of 24,500-24,400 in the short term. On the upside, the 25,000 level continues to act as strong resistance.

Indian markets are expected to open flat amid the absence of significant global cues.

Dollar's Deepest Decline of the New Millennium

The U.S. dollar (DXY) is on track for its sharpest year-to-date decline since at least 2000, underperforming every prior year in the 21st century.

- Key observations:
 - The 2025 trajectory (blue line) is clearly outside the lower bound of the typical annual trading range, highlighting the severity of the move.
 - The dollar is down nearly 10% year-to-date, driven by rate differentials, disinflation, weakening capital flows, and rising investor risk appetite globally.
 - This aligns with recent BofA Fund Manager Survey data showing the most underweight USD positioning in 20 years.
 - This is more than just a currency correction. It may be signaling a macro regime shift.
